Bangladesh: Bilbathuagani village, Tangail district

Mokrom Ali (aged 32, forced to revert to Islam against his will: “The chairman and the imams of the mosques interrogated me for accepting Christianity. They asked me why I had become a Christian. It is a great sin to become a Christian from Islam. If I did not accept Islam, they would beat me, burn my house, and evict me from the society...Their threats chilled me to the bone. That is why I pretended to accept Islam, but faith in Christ is the wellspring of my life. Now I am no longer a Muslim; I am a Christian”)

Mojnu Mia (aged 31, forced to revert to Islam against his will: “The chairman and the imams asked me what my religion is. I said I was a Christian. Then they threatened to beat me and evict me from the village unless I recanted my faith in Christianity...They had browbeaten me into accepting Islam. I accepted it only to get out from that predicament. But later, I embraced Christianity by swearing a confession in the court”)

Rev Mrinal Kanti Baroi (tried to defend converts to Christianity by citing the religious freedom clause in the country's constitution to the local authorities, was ignored)

Wilson Chowdhry (Chairman of the British Pakistani Christian Association, said in Paris, France of the bombing of All Saints Church: "My wife lost 13 members of her family in this tragic incident, spanning three generations. Communication with Urdu Fellowships across the UK has confirmed that every parish has a member that has suffered human loss in this - the worst tragedy to hit Pakistani Christians in recent times...This act of violence has created huge anxiety and a sense of hopelessness amongst Christians in Pakistan who already suffer severe intolerance and prejudice. Their perceived value in a society of weak government and immense extremism has reached a nadir. Unless Pakistan's Government takes seriously it's responsibility to protect this vulnerable minority, the continued attacks will lead to the eventual extermination of Christians living there")
